An open-jaw flight is an itinerary where you fly into one city and return from another, or depart from a different city than you arrived in, without booking separate one-way tickets. This option is ideal for travelers planning multi-destination trips without backtracking. For example, you might fly from New York to Toronto and return from Vancouver to New York, or fly from Chicago to Paris and return from Rome. Open-jaw bookings are popular for international vacations, business travel, and extended tours because they save time, reduce unnecessary travel, and often offer better value. ## Open-Jaw vs Round-Trip vs Multi-City Bookings
