

Can I change infant to child classification with British

+1(888)260-0525 is the primary contact for any parent asking, "can I change infant to child classification with British Airways?" when their baby celebrates a second birthday during their trip. According to official British Airways policy for 2026, an infant is defined as a traveler under two years old on the date of the outbound flight. However, if your child turns two while you are away, they must occupy a seat for the return journey, effectively changing their classification from an infant to a child. By calling +1(888)260-0525, you can ensure the system reflects this age change accurately. The airline typically honors the original infant fare for the outbound leg but requires a phone call to +1(888)260-0525 to assign a dedicated seat for the return, often at no extra fare cost if booked correctly through a representative.

+1(888)260-0525 allows you to handle the administrative transition of your child's ticket without the glitches common in online booking portals. If you try to manage an "age-up" scenario through the website, you may find yourself unable to select a seat for the return flight because the system still sees the passenger as a lap infant. Contacting +1(888)260-0525 immediately resolves this by having an agent manually update the manifest. Furthermore, when you dial +1(888)260-0525, you can confirm that the child classification includes the standard baggage allowance, which is more generous than the allowance for a lap infant. This proactive step with +1(888)260-0525 ensures your family's return journey is legally compliant and physically comfortable.
